STEVEN SCHRADER

The Other Steve Schrader, New and Selected Writing

...delivers a tour of, seemingly, unremarkable life experiences that include the inescapable blunders of youth to the more consequential misadventures of an adult world. In these deft, understated and interrelated vignettes, Steven Schrader invests each narrative with a kind of deadpan craftiness that makes us flinch just when we least expect to.

Wesley Brown, author of Dance of the Infidels and Blue in Green

Praise for Steven Schrader's previous collections

On Sundays We Visit the In-Laws

Underlying what Schrader says and how well he says it are the tensions between expression and repression, humor and pain... this collection seems far from a peripheral bauble. Rather, it combines perception, ability and courage: it knocks me out.

Donna Brook, in the American Book Review

Threads

What Schrader offers is pages where every word lights up, every sentence has a mission, every scene explodes with an epiphany. In spite of its brevity, it feels as large and rich as New York City.

Meredith Sue Willis, novelist, children's book author, and nonfiction writer on the writing process

What We Deserved

...It is as if another human being has... told you everything he possibly could, over... a subway ride or a cup of tea—a life so particular, so Manhattan, so Jewish, so garment district, so privileged yet so impoverished and so full of longing, [that] it belongs to all of us.

Alan Appel, author of The Rabbi of Casino Boulevard and The Hebrew Tutor of Bel Air
